the pope.

The testimony came after a private meeting Monday in prison with his defense lawyer, Pietro d'Ovidio. Mr. Agca told the court last week that he wanted to consult with his lawyer before deciding whether to continue testifying. Mr. Agea's claim that the Soviet Union was directly involved in the attempted murder of the pope came when he was asked by Judge Santiapichi whether he intended to continue to give evidence. He re-

Mr. Agca, 27, then said: "The orders to kill the pope came from the Soviet Embassy in Sofia. We Gray Wolves acted with the complicity of three Bulgarian officials in Rome." Gorbachev Vows Radical Shifts In the Economy

By Dusko Doder Washington Post Service

MOSCOW - Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, said Tuesday that he would direct a "pro-found restructuring" of the economy, and he provided the first indications of the direction in which these changes would be

He called for legislation to introduce "cost accounting, economic levers and incentives" in the system: to increase "the consumer's influence" in general; to "radically improve" the process of price for-mation, and to curtail the role of centralized planning.

Speaking at a conference attended by members of the Communist Party's Central Committee and top state and economic officials, Mr. Gorbachev called for changes in party work to "deal with the human factor, the decisive factor of all

He obliquely criticized his immediate predecessor. Konstantin U. Chernenko, saying that the draft economic plan for the next five years, and through the rest of the century, had been criticized in the ruling Politburo, "which necessitates that work on the draft be continued.'

He criticized directly a number of ministers responsible for the economy and said that it was necessary "to remove everything outdat-ed" and to "literally rap inefficient economic executives over the fundamental essence of the restructuring" as involving efforts to in-crease the system's efficiency and "to expand the independence and responsibility of enterprises, to make vigorous use of more flexible forms and methods of management, cost accounting and commodity-monetary relations and exensively develop the initiative."

"The business at hand is formidable, it is innovative, broad in scope and difficult. he added, according to a partial text of his speech distributed by Tass, the official press agency.

The speech judging from the partial text, constitutes the most comprehensive account of changes the new leadership is planning. It closely followed the general line set out by Yuri V. Andropov, who was

Mr. Gorbachev's mentor. A documentary film about Mr. Andropov was premiered here Monday night in what is seen as an unprecedented tribute to the late Soviet leader.

In his speech Mr. Gorbachev asserted that structural changes were long overdue and, by implication, criticized the era of Leonid I.

"One cannot help seeing that since the early 1970s certain difficulties began to be felt in economic development," he said, "The main reason is that we did not in time display perseverance in reshaping the structural policy, the forms and ready for breaking away from the limits now, but that this could change by November as Soviet milpolicy during a period of important political and diplomatic sparring political and diplomatic sparring ports continue, or even increase, about Soviet violations.

Under its terms as signed in 1979, the treaty is to expire at the end of 1985. The two countries, however, have continued to observe the limits of the SALT-1 interim agreement long after its theoretical termination date, and it is an open question whether their com-pliance with the unratified SALT-2 treaty will end Dec. 31.

The summer round and an auturnn round of U.S.-Soviet nuclear and space arms negotiations in Geneva is likely to be over by November. Thus the United States and its allies will have nearly eight months experience at the new arms talks with which to make judgments about their course.

It is also possible that Mr. Rea gan and Mr. Gorbachev might meet, or at least schedule a meeting, before the November study is completed.

Mr. Reagan's decision was seen as a defeat for Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger, who had urged him to abandon the treaty.

U.S. Hospitals Limit Alien Transplants Area, 10 percent of all kidney transplants in the United States in 1982 were performed on foreign

Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Many U.S. hospitals, faced with a controversy over transplants of scarce organs, are refusing to perform transplants for foreign citizens or have moved to grant preference to U.S. citizens. Rush Presbyterian Hospital in Chicago "won't do bone marrow, comea transplants, anything, on foreign nationals because of the problem we had" with complaints about foreigners receiving kidneys, said Paul Volek, director of organ procurement for the Chicago

"Americans are dying without organs," Mr. Volek said. "How in good conscience can we offer them to others who come to this country?"

The American Society of Transplant Surgeons voted last month to give preference to U.S. citizens for transplants, and advised the nation's 39 organ networks to revise their computer lists to show which candidates are U.S. citizens.

Many doctors are uncomfortable in allocating life-saving operations on the basis of nationality. "We're talking about medicine here, about life," said Dr. Said A. Karmi, director of transplant services at George Washington University Medical Center. According to a report of a local group called End Stage Renal Disease Network of the National Capital citizens during that year. The percentage is much higher in many localities. In the Washington area, 26 percent were foreign citizens.

Local doctors say the high rate of foreign citizens receiving transplants in the United States can be explained in part by the fact that organ donation is not common in many countries. In addition, it is sometimes proscribed for religious or cultural reasons.

The high rate of transplants for foreign citizens has led to discontent in Washington, where there is a particular need for kidneys because the city leads the nation in the rate of kidney disease.

"There is a high rate of hypertension among blacks" and the disease can lead to kidney failure, explained Dr. Clive Callender, director of Howard University Hospital's transplant center. About 150 residents of the districts, mostly blacks, are waiting for kidneys. Ernest Bauer, chairman of the local network's patient action committee, described the large number of kidney transplant involving foreigners as "wrong and an affront to U.S. residents." Responding to such concerns, the Washington Hospital Center adopted a policy giving preference to U.S. citizens for transplants. The proportion of foreign (Continued on Page 2, Col. 2)

Five Months for SALT-2

President Reagan has reached the right decision in postponing a clear violation of the SALT-2 missile limits next fall. He will "plan" to deactivate and dismantle one old-fashioned Poseidon missile submarine when a more potent Trident goes to sea. That buys five months for arms control negotiations. It also buys the time he would need to prove that America is not primarily to blame if they should fail.

Even if the Poseidon dismantling proceeds, the costs would be negligible. Keeping the submarine in service would exceed the SALT-2 treaty's ceiling - of 1,200 missiles with multiple warheads — by a total of 14 missiles. To have opted for that treaty breakout now would have risked torpedoing the Geneva arms talks, offending the NATO allies and undermining President Reagan's campaign to call attention to more ambiguous Soviet violations.

All this emphasis on violations is peripheral in any case. Both superpowers have reason to be perturbed about the pace of the arms race. What truly concerns them is not this old submarine or that secret lunge for marginal advantage but their wholly open acquisition of huge new weapons systems.

Mr. Reagan rightly complains about the disturbing Soviet buildup of the last decade, however much it is permitted by treaty. The Russians rightly complain of the alarming Reagan plan for a "star wars" defense, however much it, too, is so far permitted.

It is only a matter of time - very little time - before these exertions move from violating the spirit of arms control to destroying the core of the SALT-1 and SALT-2 accords. The first has expired and the second was, at Mr. Reagan's initiative, never ratified. There is not much comfort to be found in the intervening Soviet and U.S. pledges nonetheless to observe the accords until new treaties can be negotiated. If Mr. Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev do not shake hands on something firmer before SALT-2 also expires in December, they are bound to turn from constructive negotiation to bitter recrimination about their costly failure.

President Reagan's decision on the Poseidon, right as it is, does nothing to resolve the disagreements over arms control inside his own administration. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger loudly advertised a desire to answer Soviet treaty violations with an American violation. That makes Monday's choice by Mr. Reagan appear momentarily conciliatory. But the Pentagon comes away with ample authority to plan for more significant treaty break-outs: for testing a Midgerman missile as a supplement rather than replacement for the MX, and also exotic technologies that jeopardize the most significant of all arms agreements, the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty forbidding significant missile defense.

Mr. Reagan thus plays out to the last available months his strategy of frightening the Russians with an economically ruinous arms race for offensive and defensive weapons. If he has judged right, a timely offer to restrain his "star wars" effort may yet yield a major reduc-tion of both sides' offensive missiles. If not, no amount of concern for old treaty limits will contain the tense competition that lies ahead.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

It could not have been easy for President Reagan to decide to stick with his policy of not undercutting SALT-2, the (unratified) treaty he had done so much to identify as the epitome of bad arms control. His constituents on the right were bound to recall, in outrage, that he had labeled it "fatally flawed." Pentagon civilian chiefs were pressing him hard to scrap the treaty. Soviet violations are both serious and accepted enough to have given him a strong rationale. Yet Mr. Reagan accepted more pragmatic counsel and did the right thing — in part to boost the Geneva talks. He agreed to keep in force the policy of not undercutting the terms of the unratified agreement and to stay under a key SALT ceiling not by the gimmick of drydocking an old Poseidon submarine but by dismantling it outright.

Mr. Reagan has walked a fine line between hotly contending parts of his administration. In effect he said to Secretary of State George Shultz and other partisans of the "no-undercut" policy: I am giving you five months to show that it will produce comparable Soviet restraint plus a good-faith Soviet approach to the Geneva talks. To Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and others who wanted to scrap SALT-2, he said: Hold on for five months and then you may tell me what addi-

Keep SALT-2 and Better It

The Reagan administration has solved its' internal difficulties over the SALT treaty — for that is what they chiefly are - by sticking more or less to the treaty's terms but doing so with minimum grace. The fact that the argument has been won, for the time being, by [George] Shultz and the State Department is

Other Opinion

tional arms-building steps are an "appropriate and proportionate" response to the military consequences of uncorrected Soviet violations.

This, then, is Mr. Reagan's response to the problems caused by the Soviet compliance record. One need not accept every item in the Reagan bill of particulars to acknowledge that the Russians have violated in different ways important elements of various arms control agreements. Mr. Reagan had an obligation to show that he was addressing this special question seriously, and not just to make good on a campaign pledge or to win the American peo-ple's trust for further negotiated arms control.

In the process he has given Secretary Shultz an extremely demanding assignment, one for which he will need a degree of Soviet coopera-tion that is hard to imagine. In the short space of five months Mr. Shultz is to produce new Soviet restraint on violations - a sensible demand, although one that entails difficult issues of definition and verification. He is also to produce progress at Geneva. This may be an impossible condition, given the deadlock now prevailing and the difficulty of breaking it soon even if compliance were no issue. In any event, Mr. Reagan has contrived to ensure that November will be a dramatic month.

A Semi-Victory for Substance Over Hard Rhetoric

W ASHINGTON —The distribution of power in the second Reagan administration finds precise expression in the decision to abide by the SALT-2 treaty even though it has not been ratified. The White House rhetoric sounds tough. But control over most substantive issues - foreign policy as well as taxes and the budget - has passed out of the White House, Mr. Reagan has been assigned the role of hanging semi-tough.

On budget matters the point is obvious. The serious work is being done by Budget Director David Stockman and the Republican Senate leadership under Bob Dole, Mr. Reagan has had to go along with their moves to curtail military and Social Security spending. He will probably have to go further as Mr. Dole and Mr. Stockman work out a compromise with the House Demo-crats. The threat of a veto, implied in the smart-aleck dare to "make my day," is rhetoric.

On tax reform the work is being done by the Treasury under James Baker. In making accommodation with oil and gas interests, Mr. Baker turned Mr. Reagan around, and also the White House chief of staff and former Treasury secretary, Don Regan. Similar adjustments may be worked out as the legislation moves through the House and Senate. Talk about a "second American revolution" is also rhetoric.

In foreign policy, the heavy input comes from the State Department under George Shuitz and from the National Security Council under Robert McFarlane. The Defense Department, under Caspar Weinberger, and the ClA, under William Casey, are consulted, of course, and their positions tend to be amplified by the White House noise-makers under Pat Buchanan. But Pentagon procurement scandals and defense budget prob-lems have sharply reduced the Weinberger clout.

The big losers in the decision against renouncing SALT-2 were Mr. Weinberger, Mr. Casey and Mr. Buchanan. All three had laid great stress on Soviet "violations" of SALT-2. Mr. Weinberger's chief guru on strategic matters, Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Perle, had advertised his views in a public speech on the subject. The rhetorical side of the White House had backed up the hard-line view by recalling that, in the 1980 campaign, Reagan had attacked the SALT-2 treaty as "fatally flawed."

But Mr. Shultz fought hard against a formal break with SALT-2, and mobilized forces that could not be ignored. At a meeting of the NATO

Council in Lisbon, allied foreign ministers to a man supported him in resisting an overt breach of the rules. Earlier both Houses of Congress had passed by overwhelming majorities resolutions opposing formal denunciation. The implication was that Congress would make the already sticky going on the defense budget a lot stickier if Mr. Reagan departed from the terms of the treaty.

The national security adviser, Mr. McFarlane, deftly appropriated the military. The Joint Chiefs were asked whether, from a strictly military view, it would be better to honor SALT-2 and its mechanism for checking violations or to kick free of the treaty restraints. Their judgment was that the military outcome was inconclusive - in the words of one senior official, a "wash." With that mandate in his pocket, Mr. McFarin the direction of the previous assertion that SALT-2 was "fatally flawed." The key proviso, announced on Monday, is to deactivate for six months a submarine due to be scrapped under SALT-2. Thus Mr. Reagan awaits Soviet performance on arms control before finally going along with the treaty by retiring the sub. He reserves the right to react in response to any actions by the right to react in response to any actions by Moscow perceived to be violations of the treaty.

The upshot is postponement of a deliberate effort to destroy the Geneva arms control negoting. ations. The talks can proceed for several more months before the United States thinks again about breaking the SALT-2 treaty in a way that might lead to a Soviet disavowal of the whole process. With a little progress in the Geneva talks, the treaty can be kept intact.

Moreover, it is not as if the United States was leaving arms control success up to something the Russians could not deliver. It will be enough for Moscow to agree to a summit in the near future.

Mr. Reagan's decision is a technical victory for Mr. Shultz and Mr. McFarlane. Those hoping for an easing of Soviet-U.S. tensions have reason to sound two cheers. For the betting in Washington is that Mikhail Gorbachev will agree to a summit before his party congress in February. But if substance saved the day from rhetoric, rhetoric is not nothing. There is a difference between saying the wrong thing and saying the right thing, and it matters in national leadership. By saying the wrong thing, Mr. Rengan has so far marred his second term. He has alienated the Democrats and much of his own party. He has put off America's allies, and handed cheap propaganda openings to the Russians. He has failed to seize unambiguously the historic opportuni-ties for a second term. Instead of rising to the statesman's role, he has made himself the faltering leader of an embattled, ideological faction.

Third World Centrists: Denying Them Can't Help

WASHINGTON — In recent years, U.S. foreign policy in the Third World has been based on a despair of the center. There is no third way. Americans concluded, between the extremes of fascism and communism. But that may be wrong.

modern history of the region, while not exactly one of its finest chapters, had the ironic consequence of imharbing democratic ideals. If O honoring them in the breach. Latin American democrats frequently invoke Jeffersonian principles.

Such conditions for the center may be found in other spots of turmoil, most notably in the Philippines. There, a Duarte-like figure exists in the person of the opposition leader, Salvador Laurel. Yet the United States, in defiance of all the rules for a Duarte-like success, continues to encourage the extremism of President Ferdinand Marcos.

The United States cannot invent democrats around the world. But surely it can help them when they are there. It will not help them if it decides at the outset, out of a kind of conservative defeatism, that the only work that remains to be done is dirty.

Nicaragua: A Neat War Is Unlikely

By Tom Wicker

N EW YORK — For U.S. military forces, an invasion of Nicarague would be "like falling off a log," says an intelligence officer. And an official of the army's Southern Comcial of the army's Southern Command estimates that it would take only two weeks to gain control of 60 percent of the Nicaraguan popula-tion. So there's light at the end of the tunnel even before the United States strides into a new quagnure.

No sweet, 2 "U.S. political-military officer in the region" has told Joel Brinkley and Bill Keller of The New York Times: "The U.S. would come in heavily for a month or so, mostly with air strikes against major facilities. Then a new government would be put into place, and it would come with its own army to clean up whatever resistance might remain.
If that sounds familiar, it is, Satis-tary air power with its "surgical strikes" was supposed to make short strikes" was supposed to make state work of the primitive Victoria and the North Victoriance, too, while few American casualizes from a derify ground war. For a long decade of death and destruction, the United States searched for a popular and effective government to "put into place" in Saigon — never grasping that a government handpacked in Washington could have little legislimacy in Victoriancese eyes. an enemy it hardly tried to defeat.

Does that reflect the much-derided "Vietnam syndrome" or "lear of the use of power"? No. it reflects the hard but essential lessons — taught not just in Vietnam but in Afghani-stan as well — that political problems do not necessarily have military solutions, and that military and technological might cannot always over-come a politically or patriotically motivated populace.

But Nicaragua would be different, Messes. Brinkley and Keller have been told. For one thing, the popula-tion would "rise up" to support the invaders — an expectation that in-nores the history of gringo military intervention in Central America and assumes that Nicaraguans so hate the Sandinist government that they would welcome another microencon and a new U.S. occupation.

If so, would the Sandmists have armed Nicaragnans so extensively and given military training to somany? Why doesn't this armed people rise now and join the "contras" that the Reagan administration organization of the contrast of the contr nized and supports? Isn't it as likely that a U.S. invasion would increase patriotic support for the Sandinists?

And if the government that Washington would "put into place" were derived, as is probable, from the same "contras," then elements of the Somoza regime that Nicaragnans really did rise against would be restored to power. Would such a tainted government, or the army that the United States would train and equip, be likely to gain sufficient popular support to win a quick war over the Marxist but nationalist guerrillas that the Sandinists would send to the jungles? Experience in Vietnam and Afghanistan argue against that.

The Times reporters were assured that the Sandinists would have no Ho Chi Minh Trail, and that Nicaragua could be sealed off "tighter then a drum" by air and sea power -- technology again. But guerrillas are not totally dependent on outside supplies. They can live off the population, and — as in El Salvador and Vietnam — they can arm themselves with captured U.S. weapons from the halfhearted armies that pursue them.

Suppose it did not turn out to be a "splendid little war"? As one cau-tious colonel warned: "Twe been in the army 24 years and I've never seen anything neat." The army says it should not be asked to light again without public support; but in a television age, with American families watching body bags again coming home from a frustrating war in which firepower and technology cannot find the common state of the c find an enemy to pulverize, how long could public support be maintained? Even without a war, polls show no majority backing for overthrowing the Sandinists. Even the Reagan administration concedes that a U.S. invasion would be a political disaster in the rest of the hemisphere. And it is not necessarily true that the United States soon may have no other choice but to send in its troops.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD, Massachusetts — One of the most interesting things about jour-nalism in America is that so many of its memorable characters have been country editors. From Tom Paine to Mark Twain, and the Baltimore crowd from Henry Mencken to Russell Baker, it has been the hicks from the sticks who took over the big city crowd.

Nor have the television news heroes of recent years been dominated by city slickers or Ivy League types, but by Walter Cronkite out of the Middle West and Texas, Eric Sevareid of Minnesota, Tom Brokaw of Kansas, and, among others, David Brinkley and Roger Mudd of the University of North Carolina.

I mention this merely to note the passing of a great country editor, Henry Beetle Hough, who died the other day on Martha's Vineyard Island at 88, after 65 years as editor of The Vineyard Gazette. He is, in my mind, a symbol of this country journalism that has been and still is the school where most prominent modern reporters got their training. Mr. Hough was an old-fashioned man who believed that sticking to the news of the island was more important than worrying about the confusions on the mainland. He reported on the central questions of life here — birth, marriage and death - but he was not interested in divorce unless it was an unavoidable island scandal.

His main concern was the preservation of the unity, privacy and beauty of this island. In 65 years he seldom left it except once in a while to meet his responsibilities as the head of the Thoreau Foundation in By James Reston

Boston, or to check in at the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston when he was in trouble. A young colleague on The Gazette asked him one day if he didn't long occasionally to see the world beyond the waters of the Vineyard. "Not often," Henry Hough said, "but when I feel the urge coming on, I collect a bunch of old National Geographic magazines, climb up to the attic of The Gazette and stick my feet in a bucket of cold water until the feeling wears off."

He worned about death and retirement. In his book "Country Editor," he suggested "that death is the most characteristic of all the forces in a country town, because there are always so many old people living there, and the passing of an individual is so much more important than it is in the city. Besides, a town has time to mourn.

"The obituary is a distinctive story-forum for the country weekly because it has to tell not only the stark facts of somebody's life, but it has to tell also a little of what that somebody was like, and what his career seemed to stand for. It has to tell even what a nobody was like, for the poorest citizen is in the eyes of the town a man."

It amused Mr. Hough when one of our old newspaper buddies here on the Vineyard, Red Smith, of the old Herald Tribune and The New York Times, made a speech, saying:
"Death is no big deal — almost any of us can manage it. Living is the trick we have to learn."

Mr. Hough learned that trick well. He thought the thing was to concentrate on simple things: his family, his paper, his community, and nothing else. He made some enemies in the process, for he wanted to limit the growth of the island, while others wanted to get more people, more houses. At the end he thought he was losing.

In some ways he was wrong, and too pessimistic. Thirry-five years ago he worried about retirement and death. In 1950 he wrote the following in a lovely book called "Once More the Thunderer":

"How to resign the duties of a country editor — that is what we should like to know ... Apparently there is no way to taper off as there is in some worldly occupations. It is all or nothing, until the end, whatever the end of country editorship may be, presents itself like the press time of a Friday afternoon.

"How to sweep the papers from the desk that have been there so long, and leave the heap of exchanges unopened, and hear the telephone ringing but let it go unanswered as one steps through the door as an editor for the last time, into a street of mellow twilight twilight of course because quitting time must be fall, with the white houses of the town early in shadow and the stores already lighted as one walks home through the creeping, aromatic New England dusk." Mr. Hough wrote that 30 years ago, but he continued on until a few days ago when he wrote his last editorials. Always a punctual man, he died at 4 o'clock on Thursday afternoon just before deadline on his Friday paper.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Toward an Army Apart In response to the report "Study Calls Reporters a 'Necessity' Where U.S. Troops Are in Combat" (May 31):

The report by the Twentieth Cen-tury Fund Task Force on Military and the Media addresses just one aspect of the growing gap between the military and the rest of American society. The all-volunteer armed forces, in spite of some positive qualities, will inevitably be the source of a "gap" in American society.

The armed forces are not a cross section of the population. Minority groups are represented far in excess of their proportion of the citizenry. Cross-fertilization between the military and the rest of society is severely limited, as military personnel tend to their careers and other Americans struggle in the marketplace. Career military personnel have always had limited contact with other walks of life. But in a few years virtually no high government official or influential civilian — Congressman or corporation executive, judge or journalist — will have had military experience. At that point, what sort of munual understanding will exist petence, not their race or sex.

forces? When budgets are drawn up, missions assigned, forces committed and credit or blame assessed, how will the military institution interact with a society to which it does not fully belong? Will the interests of the military begin to diverge from the interests of society as a whole? These are some of the questions which our country must address if it wishes to remain a democracy. B.D. SCHULLER Estorii, Portugal.

No Discrimination at All

Anthony Lewis's opinion column on reverse discrimination ("Crusading in Favor of White Men," June 7) confuses the issue. He promotes the principle that one keeps hearing from people like him: Discrimination according to sex and race is sometimes good (if it suits social purposes they approve of) and sometimes bad (if it suits social purposes they disapprove of). Mr. Lewis and those who share his position need to learn that it is discrimination that is wrong. The principle is simple enough: You deal | with people according to their com-

Gandhi Aides Fear a Shift From Domestic Priorities

NEW DELHI - Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi continues to enjoy popularity at home, but some of his associates are frustrated at the slow pace of progress in solving India's Government officials feared there would be renewed bombings and killings by Sikh extremists to commemorate the Golden Temple raid. Even the less militant Sikh ders had called for agitations and demonstrations in honor of what they called "genocide week."

But perhaps because of a heightened army and police presence throughout porthern India, especially in the state of Punjab, there has been little violence.

Portugal, Spain to Sign Treaty Today

BRUSSELS - Spain and Portugal will sign Wednesday a treaty allowing them to join the European Community.

Their membership in the bloc will start formally on Jan. 1, bringsing to 12 the number of member nations. Six nations signed the founding Treaty of Rome in 1957.

Portugal will sign an accession treaty in Lisbon in the morning and Spain in Madrid in the afternoon. The signing comes after more than eight years of negotiations and is seen by EC leaders as a political act, bringing the two countries formally into the fold of West-em democracy. The prime ministers of Italy, which currently holds the commumity's rotating presidency, Belgium, Denmark, France, Ireland and the Netherlands will attend the ceremonies. The other members will be gepresented by their loreign minis-.

U.S. College Tuition: It's an Auto Dealer's Mix of Discounts, Lures

By Edward B. Fiske New York Times Service

TEW YORK - When Laura Hurwitt opened her letter of acceptance from the College of Wooster in Ohio last month, she found that she had been offered an unsolicited scholarship of $1,000 a year. To her father, who heads the breakfast foods division of General Foods, it struck a familiar chord.

"It reminded me of how we give out coupons good for 25 cents on the next purchase of Post Raisin Bran," said David F. Hurwitt, who lives in Darien, Connecticut. "Laura was offered a 10-percent discount on a college education."

The Hurwitts' experience reflects the recent blurring of differences between the pricing poli-cies of higher education and those of other highly competitive industries such as automobiles and airlines.

Most colleges and universities have announced tuition increases for next autumn that range from 7 to 10 percent. The tuition hikes are lower than those of recent years but are still twice the rate of growth in the Consumer Price Index, which measures the average change in prices of U.S. goods and services.

To justify the increases, institutions cite factors ranging from the labor-intensive nature of teaching to cutbacks in federal aid for students. But interviews with economists, college financial officers and others across the nation suggest that the real reasons are far more complicated and involve assumptions and practices that go largely unnoticed. Among them are the follow-

 Many colleges have few incentives to keep costs low and set official tuition rates as high as the market will bear.

 Discounts of various kinds are routinely offered to certain categories of students. Officials of competing colleges frequently share financial information in ways that some concede would be illegal in the commercial

 Tuitions are structured so that undergraduates subsidize doctoral candidates, wealthy students help poor ones, and students in certain majors, such as philosophy, subsidize those in others such as engineering.

As competition for able students increases, colleges are foregoing efforts to keep tuition down and are trying to spend as much as possible on academic quality, redistributing their resources to offer discounts to selected students.

HE new discounts range from merit scholarships for middle-class students to foreign-student tuition indexed to the strength of the dollar in home countries. Like automobile dealers, colleges are attracting cus-tomers with sophisticated financing arrange-ments, many of them designed to help wealthy families use the tax code to ease education expenses.

"We are all trying to outsmart each other in what is probably the most competitive industry in the country," said Eamon M. Kelly, the president of Tulane University in New Orleans. "Tuitions don't go up at the rate they do be-cause we're labor-intensive. Tuitions go up because we have become a discounting industry." The process of setting tuition is complex.

Although they face the same general costs, private colleges and universities as a group cannot match the price of public institutions. Instead, they base their appeal primarily on quality, a principle that also applies to competition in "Overwhelmingly, students and families choose an institution on the basis of academic quality and not price," said Neil L. Rudenstine, the provost of Princeton University in New cent over the last two years, applications have been up by one quarter.

Given the choice between lowering tuition and increasing quality, top academic institu-tions are tempted to choose the latter. Most colleges that have large endowments, and therefore could lower tuition if they chose to, tend to charge the highest tuition.

"The basic operating theory is to raise all the money you can and then spend it all," said Howard Bowen, a leading expert on higher education finance at the Claremont Graduate for example, where tuition has risen by 16 percent over the last two years, applications have limage of high academic quality in the absence of institutions with which they compete, and a cent over the last two years, applications have you on the record, but there is a kind of macho attitude," said F. Frederick Starr, the president of Oberlin College in Ohio. "People say, Boy, that's a high-priced place, but people are trip-ping over themselves to get into it. They must be small liberal arts institutions, from Amherst

> For many years Bennington College in Vermont, which had no endowment, made a point of being the nation's most expensive college. In the late 1970s the University of Chicago con-cluded that it was "under-priced" for the quality budgeting process. "It's like runners positioning

At Bowdoin College in Maine, Some officials say it is difficult to project an Most private colleges have a group of peer down and did what colleges do, they would be in tance. The leveling-off of federal student assis- do we need?

To maintain or improve quality, private colleges have developed a variety of internal subsidies that affect the amount of tuition a particular student will pay.

Many research universities, for example, use tuition income from undergraduates to subsidize graduate students and research programs. fellowships or hold jobs as teaching assistants and sciences get a free ride," said Mr. Kelly of Tulane. "The overhead costs are paid by under-

Katharine H. Hanson, executive director of the Consortium on Financing Higher Education, said that among 30 selective private instinations, the cost of a year at undergraduate liberal arts colleges tends to be "$1,000 to $2,000 lower" than the cost at a research university of comparable academic reputation with graduate schools.

In another internal subsidy, revenues from students in such low-cost academic areas as the arts and humanities are used to pay for instruction in science, which is much more expensive. "There's a correlation between high tuition and high commitment to science," said Mr. Starr of Oberlin, a liberal arts college that has traditionally been strong in the natural sciences.

Finally, colleges are increasingly using in-come from wealthy students to subsidize the education of poor and middle-class students. Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania has announced an 11-percent tuition increase for this fall in order to restructure its financial aid packages. "We decided we have fewer students from low-income families than we should," said David Fraser, the president, "so we are lowering the amount of loans we offer and increasing the amount of outright grants." Some critics argue that this "Robin Hood" approach is unfair to students who pay the full amount. College officials reply that tuition revenues cover only a portion of operating costs anyway: even students who pay the full tuition are receiving a subsidy from endowment, gifts and other income.

They also argue that socioeconomic diversity is intrinsic to the quality of the experience that they offer. And it would be impossible, they say, to recruit top students without pouring substan-tial amounts into financial aid. "If you define the pool of students who met our academic standards and had the money to pay, you're only talking about 18,000 people in the entire country," said Arnold R. Weber, the president of Northwestern University in Illinois.

Economists specializing in higher education say that the unition rise can be deceiving. A major trend that mitigates the tuition increases is the widespread practice of "discounting." Robert Zemsky, an economist at the University of Pennsylvania, said the pricing of higher education increasingly resembles that of the car industry. "You have to look at college tuitions the way you look at a car," he said. "You have a sticker price, a discount price and a cash price, and most people get some kind of a deal. Mr. Zemsky traces the concept of discounting to the federal student assistance programs in the mid-1970s. Poor students could have almost their entire education subsidized, but even wealthy ones paid a lower "cash price" because for as long as four years and were repaid in inflated, and therefore cheaper, dollars.

"Go back to the automobile analogy," said
Mr. Zemsky, "It didn't matter what the sticker current trends will be to price the poor out of said. It was the monthly payments that mat-violation of anti-trust laws." He noted, however, that "mition only pays a small fraction of the cost of education." only more widespread but more sopheticated.

With the exception of the lyst league and other highly selective institutions, almost all private colleges and universities offer at least a small number of "merit scholarships" to academically able students who would not otherwise quality for financial assistance.

The unsolicited $1,000 a-year scholaration Graduate students pay tuition, but many receive that the College of Worster offered Laura Harwitt, a senior at The Principal, a private school that are funded partly by undergraduates' tuition payments. "Our graduate students in arts and seigness set a fine side." said Mr. Kally of industry has its discounting hingo," said the General Foods executive "We have coupons. The airlines have APEN (ares. Colleges call it.

Even some Ivy League whereis revently began to practice what is known as "differential packaging of financial aid. Cornell University divides applicants who are accepted and promised aid into three categories depending on how eager it is to enroll them. The most desirable students are offered a higher proportion of their aid in the form of grants rather than louis.

The University of Penesylvania's Pene Pien includes an option allowing parents to pay for all four years of tuition in advance with torrowed funds at the freshman-year rate. A family that accepts the offer can take advantage of ux deductions on the interest payments.

ANY colleges, especially those in highly competitive markets, are trying highly competitive manuals of discounts to develop as many kinds of discounts as possible. "We're very conscious that we compete with the University of Connecticut and that our tuition is six times what theirs is, so we're our tuition is six times what theirs is, so we're doing everything we can to reduce the de facts tuition," said Leland Myles, the president of the University of Bridgeport in the same state.

We're doing what I never would have dreamed of 10 years ago: charging different tuitions in different programs. You pay more to study dental hygiene than engineering and less to study liberal arts." Mr. Myles said.

Bridgeport also is freezing tuition for juniors and seniors and probably will begin adjusting foreign students' mittion rates to reflect the strength of the dollar in their home countries, he

Some colleges have taken the opposite approach and have tried to rely less on tuition for Bard College decided several years ago that its relegiously high tuitions was adverted by relatively high tuition was reducing its appeal to middle-class students. By raising funds, the college reduced the proportion of the operating budget sustained by tuition from 42 percent to 82 percent "We are still more expensive than Vassar," said Leon Botstein, the president, "but we are less more expensive than we used to be." The New School for Social Research in New York currently has a policy of reducing the rate. of undergraduate tuttion increase by I percent a year. "It went up 11 percent in 1982, then 10, 9 and 8 next fall," said Jonathan F. Fanton, the Public attitudes remain an unpredictable factor. Ms. Hanson of the consortium said there was a "perceived diminution in the value of a college education" in same quarters and sug-gested that families today have different printues for major purchases.

"People are more worried about retirement," she said. "A lot of people seem to be saying: m they had access to loans that were interest-free kid needs to go to college, but I stun't want to be for as long as four years and were repaid in eating cat food 20 years from new. There's less

New York Times Service CAIRO—Each Arab country has its symbol of intellectual malaise. On a sunny, warm morning in January, Mahmoud Mohammed Taha was publicly hanged in the main square of Kober Prison, near Khartoum. His crime was "heresy." Mr. Taha, 76 years old, had distributed a pam-phlet that opposed the way in which Islamic law was being implemented in Sudan. The amputations, lashings and other harsh pun-ishments of criminals had distorted the spirit of Islam, he argued, and had damaged Sudan's international standing

 Last month, an Egyptian court fined three booksellers for violating the country's pornography laws by selling a new, unexpurgated edition of "A Thousand and One Nights." Egyptian officials also seized 3,000 copies of the Arabic classic. "We want to expurgate from this book the dirty words, sentences and tales which have bad effects on the youth and push them toward deviation and corruption," said Brigadier Adly el-Kosheiry, head of the Interior Ministry department that prosecuted the case. Whether dramatic or little-known, such incidents point to the fact that the Arab intellectual — the heir to a 1,300-year-old culture that was once open to other civiliza-tions and which accorded its poets, philoso-phers and scientists high public esteem — is increasingly being isolated and threatened.

The reasons differ from country to country, but Arab intellectuals face some common foes.

Foremost are the high priests of Islamic fundamentalism who give the most literal interpretation to Islam's holy scriptures. These ultraconservative sheikhs are the new inquisitors, the self-appointed navigators of "al-Sirat al-Mustaque," or "the Straight Path." a phrase from the opening chapter of the Koran that is repeated five times a day by devout Moslems. To challenge or even question "the Straight Path" is to risk being branded a heretic. Few choose to do so. The ascendancy of fundamentalism implies the rejection not only of Western culture and values, but also of modernizing trends and traditions within Islam.

The Arab intellectual has other enemies. In "socialist" Arab states, such as Syria, Iraq, Libya and South Yemen, leaders who espouse revolutionary creeds have imposed a "Straight Path" of their own secular, authoritarian invention. The price of deviance poet, came to Cairo and wanted a night out in these regimes is exile, imprisonment, tor-

Another potent enemy is the glittering "petrodollar culture" of Saudi Arabia and sheikhdoms of the Gulf. Throughout the Gulf. Arab rulers of deeply conservative bent, although not of the extremist stamp of used oil revenues to spread their conserva-tive religious and political ideas and to silence Arab critics of their regimes.

"In the Arab world today, intellectuals are either beaten down by the stick or seduced by the carrot," says Fouad Ajami, a Lebanese-born political scientist and professor at Johns Hopkins University, who, like many Arab intellectuals, has chosen to live in the United States, where he can express himself more easily. "But many more have been bought off by the men of finance than destroyed by men of the sword."

Among the region's intellectuals there is gnawing self-doubt. "What does it mean to gnawing seu-doubt. "What does it mean to be an intellectual in a country like Egypt, where 70 percent of our people are illiterate and wretchedly poor?" said Bourros Ghali, Egypt's minister of state for foreign affairs, a former profession and one of his country's most reflective officials.

Egypt is one of the few Arab countries in which such questions are still routinely posed and debated. In fact, there is no better way to understand the current crisis in Arab thought than by tracing the intellectual decline of Egypt, long the cultural capital of the Arab world.

Egyptian intellectuals have a long and distinguished tradition. They are a brave lot. Almost all have spent time in jail during the past 20 years; some have been forced into exile. Under President Hosni Mubarak, a democratic trend prevails. But the greater freedom has served to underscore the Egyptian intellectual's sense of loss.

"The Cairo of old was a constantly stimulating place," says Youssef Idris, one of Egypt's most widely admired playwrights and novelists. "It was the Arab world's cultural mecca. Last week, a friend of mine, a on the town. He proposed taking in a good new play, a new Egyptian film or a fine concert. But here in this city of 14 million, there was nothing much of value to see. You know where we wound up? In a nightclub."

national secular university (now Cairo University), the Arab world's first, was founded in 1925 with seven main faculties and colleges. By the late '30s, there were nearly 200 Arabic newspapers and journals in Egypt, plus 65 in foreign languages. Writers called for greater political freedom, fewer restraints on women, a more equitable division of the country's resources. Newspapers carried lively accounts of struggles among the British, the palace and the Wafd, the major political party and champion of the prevailing liberal ideas and values. Issues of the day were debated in tea parlors and cafés. Egyptian plays dominated the Arab stage. Egyptian films were the rage. Cairo was the Arab world's publishing cen-

Egypt's of all stripes, including Islamic fundamental1952 revolution ignited hopes of a better life ists, in September 1981 — less than a month for all Egyptians, a vision that particularly before his assassination by the Islamic miliinspired the intelligentsia. To this day, many Egyptian intellectuals speak almost nostalgi-cally, reverentially, of Gamal Abdel Nasser, Egypt's authoritarian ruler, father of political pan-Arabism and a leader of the 1952 nationalist revolution that overthrew King Farouk. His promotion of secularism also enhanced his popularity among intellectuals.

But critics and victims of the Nasser era assert that the burst of cultural creativity was primarily a response to the growing political repression. Culture took on twin functions: first, to spread Nasser's orthodoxy through cratic trend in Egypt, similar to the one state-sponsored institutions, and second, as a safety valve.

"Egyptian intellectuals had an Arab market," said a newspaper editor, who requests anonymity. "So the Arab states' intellectual, economic and political boycott of Egypt after Sadat's peace with Israel in 1979 was a particular blow to them. They were cut off from the pot of gold: the Gulf. There was too small a market and too little money in Egypt to sustain them."

Few of Egypt's intellectuals mourned the death of "pharaoh Sadat," as they called him. "The intellectuals hated Sadat not because he was against them," said Professor Wahba, "but because he was indifferent to them. Nasser had given them a role: they were the purveyors of pan-Arabism, of Arab socialism, servants of the state. They never forgave Sadat for making them useless."

There is an equally disturbing silence about the slowly growing strength of islansic dents. Still understaffed and underfinanced, fundamentalism in Egypt. Many see the Arabs' future as one of Religious Moslems reject this portrayal pre-ferring to describe the struggle as one between liberal Islamic trends and factions that favor sending Egypt on "the Straight Path" into the past. At present, the few who dare challenge the fundamentalists do so at their peril.

When adding the U.S. $164 million we get a surplus of U.S. $764 million. This made it possible to reduce the country's short-term debts in 1984 as well as to increase the foreign exchange reserves of the National Bank of Hungary. What the Hungarians have in mind, though, is an easing of the restrictions imposed by numerous Western countries in trade deals with Hungary.

Some Facts and Figures In 1984 Hungary transacted 53% of its total foreign trade turnover with countries belonging to the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (COMECON), with the Soviet Union alone accounting for 32% of the total foreign trade countries in Hungarian foreign trade turnover remained at around 35%. Unequal Treatment Tibor Antalpeter, Director General in the Hungarian Ministry of Foreign Trade said it was important to appreciate the fact that there was no central Hungarian policy decision regarding what OECD countries should hold in Hungarian foreign trade. Hungary was more than willing to buy from them but this depended on raising the money by exporting to convertible currency countries. And here Hungary ran up against difficulties. There was a time - in 1978 and thereafter - when Hungary itself had to take "austerity" measures because of a rather heavy balance of payments deficit. This led to a decrease of imports in convalue. The share of OECD vertible currencies. At the same time it became obvious that there was a close relationship between the rate of growth and imports: if you slow imports you hamper the growth of the economy.

Hungary would like to see the way out of this dilemma by the conclusion of a bilateral agreement with the Common Market in Brussels. Whatever happens 1985 is going to prove a most interesting year for the Hungarian economy. The foremost need now is to increase investments so that vital structural changes in the economy can inconsistent with Article 13 be completed. This can only be accomplished though within a reasonable period if understanding is shown by partners abroad. What has emerged is a three-pronged initiative which, it is hoped, will give a dynamic impetus to production and make Hungary a shining example of what can be achieved by a centrallyplanned, but not dogmatically controlled, economy.

The essential elements

1. To increase the autonomy of enterprises, utilising their full potentials but also exposing them to

2. To extend the scope of market influences and encourage the application of market mechanisms;

3. To increase the efficiency of management by taking into account the previous two factors.

> Hungarian-Style Self-Management

Hungary commenced economic planning on a national scale nearly four decades ago. In line with a resolution passed in April 1984 by the Central Committee of the Socialist W Party (the Hungarian Communist Party), planning has been made a more open and flexible process and targets brought closer to realities.

Broadly speaking the objective of the 1968 management system was to combine a planned economy with market mechanisms.

In this spirit, two new forms of company management have been introduced in Hungary as of 1st January

• The first is the Enterprise Council exercising owner's rights in the case of medium-sized and large

Furthermore it appoints the general manager (subject to ministerial approval) and exercises employer's rights with respect to the manager. The Enterprise Council consists, in equal numbers, of delegates of the workers (employees) and representatives of the

It is important to call at-

Under these circumstances the question arises as to whether a manager will continue to put purely business interests in the foreground or just make an effort to please his workers, to be as Mr. Pulai put it - a "good boy". On the basis of experience gained in similar circumstances at agricultural cooperatives no problems are anticipated in this respect. During the past decade there has been a pronounced swing in the Hungarian economy towards the formation of joint ventures. The success has their goods and offering their nevertheless been thoroughly services in Hungary. The ad- satisfying: nearly forty joint vantages are mutual, and Hungary is encouraging this form of participation with all the means at its disposal.

Whereas the conclusion of co-operation agreements and licencing arrangements have prime movers behind this long been a feature of Hungarian business life and trade, the switch to joint ven- lows: tures only really began in the mid-1970s. The turning point came after the publication in 1972 of a Finance Ministry "Decree on Economic Associations with Foreign Participation", subsequently amended, and extended, in 1977 and

What was it that prompted this significant opening to the west on the part of a loyal member of COMECON? Because it is the West (in the sense of the advanced industrial nations) which is being sought as a main partner for joint ventures with Hungarian enterprises.

Hungarian economists are quite willing to bare their breasts in giving the answer. Whereas there have been rapid developments in Hungary during recent decades with new industries emerging and agriculture being modernized - the level of development, they say, still lags 40-50% behind that registered in the industrialized countries of western Europe experiencing similar conditions. It was therefore seen as an urgent necessity to close the gap. The country's policy makers devote considerable attention to making such structural changes in the national economy as will improve its international competitiveness, while at the same time aiming to satisfy domestic demand for a wider range of products at a higher level of quality.

The most promising field for this expansion was felt to be the formation of economic associations in Hungary with foreign participation or, in a nutshell, joint ventures.

Two Priorities Right from the start two priorities were set:

 To encourage companies from abroad to provide In calculating production costs, for example, it is important to remember that services are cheaper in Hungary, and that land, the charges for water and electricity, for building materials, the raw-materials originating in Hungary and semi-finished products are generally also cheaper than in the highly-developed industrialized countries. "Compared with developing countries or with the socalled threshold countries Hungary, as a possible partner, likewise has several comparative advantages such as its central geographical situation in Middle Europe and the resultant low freight costs, or the high level of skills among the labour force, as well as will only consider whether the proposed association is in harmony with general economic policy targets and prevailing Hungarian legal statutes. Associations, it is pointed out, can be established and function with a wide range of entrepreneurial possibilities. They can have as their aim joint production, the provision of services (hotels, transport, tourism etc.) or even the transaction of financial activities (e.g., banking). In each case the state leaves it to the Hungarian enterprises to decide in what field, industry or form they wish to set up associations with a foreign part-

garian governmental organs

Among the guarantees given are that:

- employees of foreign nationality may transfer abroad 50 percent of any kind of the incomes paid by the association in a currency stipulated in the founding memorandum;

in the event of the withdrawal of the foreign partner the National Bank of Hungary will transfer abroad the foreign partner's share due in proportion to his contribution.

Profitable Examples Generally speaking the share of Hungarian ownership in the joint venture has to be at least 51 percent and that of the foreign company cannot exceed 49 percent.

However the Minister of Finance has the right to grant permission for a higher share of foreign capital. A significant example of this is the Central European International Bank (CIB) with its seat in Budapest (but functioning as an offshore institution). In CIB six western banks (two from Japan, and one each from France, Italy, West Germany and Austria) each have an 11 percent share, leaving the National Bank of Hungary with only 34%. The success of this bank (founded in 1980, and still unique in the Socialist World) is shown by its growth statistics. CIB assets went up from US$247.7 million in 1983 to US$322.5 million in 1984; its pre-tax profits over the same period from US$6.9 million to US$17.2 million Among the other successful joint ventures over a wide range are:

- Schwarzkopf-CAOLO, for articles, with a majority Western holding; The Budapest Gambling
- Club (which runs two establishments in Hungary in conjunction with the Austrian Casino Company);
- Olympos, (manufacturing fruit juices) with a Greek partner:
- Hungarokork, (making cork stoppers and other products) with Amorin & Irmãos of Portugal; and
- APV-UNGARO, (for the production and sale on third markets of food processing plants) with Britain's APV Paracal A significant addition to Intercooperation, with its 'enterprising' image, recently hit on the idea of tapping an unlikely source of wealth. Former Hungarians, some of whom have been living abroad for thirty years and more, are being encouraged to come back and spend the evening of their days in the home country. They are offered the chance otherwise impossible for foreign eltizens - of buying a house or flat in Hungary, and certain other benefits. During the worldwide recession of 1981 and thereafter Hungary, quite unjustifiably, was made to pay for the shortcomings of two or three other Socialist countries which had let down their creditors and had to reschedule their considerable debts. Hungary, which has never had to re-schedule, suddenly found that all the financial taps had been turned off, and suffered accordingly.

Since the autumn of 1983, with Hungary a member of the International Monetary Fund, credits are flowing normally again and the country's foreign currency reserves are up to a level matching, if not already above, that recorded at the start of the liquidity crisis.

The IMF assessed the position earlier this year by saying: "The progress made by Hungary in recent years in the direction of economic adjustment was sustained in 1984 significantly and in contrast to the record in many other countries this adjustment was also achieved in conjunction with a positive and steady growth in output. Question of Convertibility

For several years now there has been talk about the desirability of conferring convertibility on the Hungarian currency, the Forint. The First Vice-President of the National Bank of Hungary, János Fekete, has repeatedly let it be known that this is one of his aims. Now the idea has been revived in the form of a

The other existing banking institutions continue meanwhile to carry out their commitments unaffected by the changes in the National Bank. These institutions are: the Hungarian Foreign Trade Bank which is fully authorized for doing business in foreign exchange and all types of international transactions; the State Development Bank which distributes funds from the national budget to state-owned companies; and OTP, the National Savings Bank with all the usual services of such an in-

Now the way is open for "financial institutions" - to be sort of central banking convertibility. In other words, the Forint might be considered as a currency for international settlements in banking, financing and trade, but Hungarian citizens would not be free to go to a bank and ask for foreign currency. The sort of time-scale now envisaged is that by late 1986, or in 1987, partial convertibility of the waste material.

In 1984, when the second of its four blocks was starting operation, Hungary's first nuclear power station at Paks accounted for 14% of the country's annual electricity output of 26,200 kWh. By 1990, if all continues to go well at Paks, the other two blocks will have become operational and the plant will be in a position to supply one quarter of the nation's electricity requirements. What these requirements will be is still a matter for some conjecture, however. If the government has its way the country will have to slow down its appetite for power, and if possible actually reduce its consumption of energy. The aim is to reach a situation where a 1% Gross Domestic Product increase will only require additional energy supplies of 0.4-0.5%. A government-sponsored scheme has been initiated to tackle this problem from both ends, by rationalizing production and streamlining energy consumption.

Swing in Emphasis Generally speaking the trend is to move away from hydrocarbon sources of energy (and within that category. from oil to natural gas) and to step up utilization of domestic coal (particularly lignite) and nuclear power. Whereas in 1978 oil and natural gas accounted for 66% of Hungary's energy requirements, in 1983 this had dropped to 60%. The government's energy management scheme makes funds available from the national budget on favourable credit terms for projects which substitute oil with other sources of ener-you could hardly do better ing the Turkish occupation. than to choose Eger as your first destination. Not only is it garden of Hungary, but it is of one of the country's most famous wines - Eger Bull's

Today Eger owes its fame mainly to this rich, deep-red elixir, known locally as Egri Bikavér, but there was a period when its name resounded throughout Europe for quite another reason. In the 16th century a small garrison at Eger successfully withstood a siege by a vastly superior the sweet, but not cloying, Turkish army. Today, more Egri Leanyka (Maiden) or than four centuries later, you the drier Olaszrizling. are frequently reminded of this heroic resistance to the Ottoman invaders.

For better or for worse the eastern invaders were more successful on their second incursion into Hungary. In 1596 the Eger garrison surrendered to the Turks on the promise of a safe conduct. The fortress remained in Turkish hands for nearly a century. For the most part the medieval city was de-

Trees and Horses

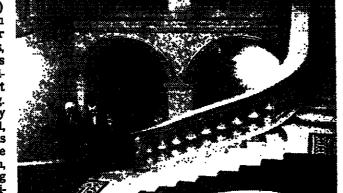

Apart from grape-growing the main industry in Heves County is forestry.

Of growing importance and already famed worldwide - is the nearby Szilvasvarad stud-farm, specializing in the breeding of Lipizzan horses. Unlike the studs at Lipica itself (in Yugoslavia) and at Piber (in Austria) where the emphasis is on mounts for riding and for haute école performances, the Szilvásvárad breeders aim to develop the best possible horses for the local sport which is carriage-driving. Jeno Kovács, the Forestry Director in Szilvásvárad, maintains that his stock is genetically the best in the world at the moment. When, last year, the Spanish Riding School in Vienna was decimated by a degenerative form of equine herpes Szilvásvárad was able to step into the gap and send ten Lipizzan stallions to Piber to help renew the highly-strung Austrian stock.

The acoustical properties were a main consideration in the design of the brand-new Budapest Convention Centre. on the other side of the Danube. With the main hall seating 1750, and total meeting space in the various Rooms (Bartók, Palma, Corvina etc.) amounting to 2500, the Convention Centre fills a long-felt gap in the city's facilities.

MAHART, the Hungarian Shipping Company, has been operating since July 1983 as an independent enterprise, no longer under ministerial jurisdiction. Simultaneously a number of structural alterations were made with the aim of improving transport and freight services for customers. Almost 200 river-borges capable of carrying 230,000 tons and 21 ocean-going vessels (110,000 tons) make the Hungarian economy largely independent of foreign shipping lines when it comes to sending goods abroad by water. For his new film, "Escalier C," Tacchella has chosen a lower social stratum than the provincial parlor types of "Cousin, Cousine." The characters are the inhabitants of a Parisian tenement, linked only by the fact that they dwell under the same roof. The plot — derived from a novel by Elvire Murail — has been through the theatrical mill in countless boarding house farces. The cross-section here is loosely knit, but it is not the over-all device but the portrayal of the characters that distinguishes the proceedings.

The central figure, played per-fectly to the last spiteful sneer by Robin Renucci, is a vicious art critic whose savage verdicts on struggling artists have brought him notoriety. He meets his come-uppance when the public relations secretary of a gallery, en-acted with fine flair by Catherine

Strindberg's Full 'Dance of Death': A Rich Marathon of Marital Loathing

By Sheridan Morley International Herald Tribune

LONDON — Four hours of Strindberg's "Dance of Death" is about two more than usual, but in giving us the uncut version Keith Hack, the director, (who recently gave us "Strange Interlude" and is clearly a man who believes in never leaving a theater much before midnight) has, at the Riverside Studios in

THE LONDON STAGE

Hammersmith, produced a rich and rare theatrical marathon in which Alan Bates and Frances de la Tour play out the 20th century's first great black comedy of

In what is turning out to be a vintage summer for great male performances (Anthony Hopkins in "Pravda," Antony Sher in "Richard III," Kenneth Branagh in "Henry V," Michael Gambon in "Old Times," Ian McKellen in "Coriolanus," Daniel Massey in "Waste,") the London theater now has Alan Bates challenging the memory of Olivier's captain, 20 years ago at the Old Vic. Olivier came on a lot stronger, but Bates paces himself better across the four hours so that by the end we are with him in the hell later conceived by Sartre's "Huis Clos," the hell that is only made up of other people.

At first he and de la Tour seem to be in a mild domestic comedy of mismatched marriage: Ted Whitehead's new translation is nothing if not colloqui-al, and the games that the captain and his appalled wife are playing have never seemed closer to those of George and Martha in "Who's Alraid of Virginia Woolf," perhaps the only 20th-century play that truly challenges this one to the sound of its own ghastly music. But by the end of the evening there is no doubt that these games are for real, and in the rarely seen last act, in which the battle is carried on into the next generation, Hack gives us sexual warfare on a global scale. Unable to live either apart or together, the captain and his lady are condemned forever to leading roles in a marital pantomime of which they are neither authors nor directors, merely stars. The Riverside Company has had the intelligence and the courage to realize that one of the many strengths of this play is that it is often very lunny indeed.

The fact that it is also a resounding hymn of hatred to the notion of marriage gives it an everlasting topicality. Bates offers us a figure at once magnificent and pathetic in his evil loathing of those who once made the mistake of liking or marrying him, and both de la Tour and Michael Byrne, as the appalled onlooking cousin, manage to suggest that they too are something less than perfect. For those who have always wondered how the "Dance of Death" ends, now is the time to find out: a savagely black comedy of appalling marital bad manners ends with a come-uppance which would delight the writers of any contemporary soap-opera of the "Dallasty" variety and the thought that the sins of the fathers are not so much visited on the children as

At the beginning of "The Overgrown Path" by Robert Holman (at the Royal Court) a Japanese girl jumps into a river and thus escapes the atomic devastation of Nagasaki in 1945: at the end of it, an English girl on holiday in Greece in 1984 takes shelter under a tree during a storm and is killed by lightning. Global If "Perfect" did not have a germ er he is generally unprincipled or and personal history, Holman seems to say, is as much

Civil War play still in the Barbican Pit repertoire) Holman shows a novelist's interest in character rather than a stage manager's need for events. An old physics professor is living in Greek exile with a wife who once nursed at Nagasaki but is now herself dying of leukemia. With them for the summer are his stepdaughter. mourning the recent loss of an artist lover who lived to 66 without ever having his voice break, and a sweet-shop proprietor from Yorkshire who has come to ask the old professor if he feels much guilt about hydrogen-bomb invention.

The play strongly echoes Brenton's "The Genius" and Louise Page's "Salonika" in its mix of nuclear and Louise rage's Salonina in its mix of nuclear guilt and sunburnt warrime memories: the trouble is that although it is more tightly constructed than Hol-man's earlier work, "The Overgrown Path" tends to ramble through the undergrowth of individual memory without getting much beyond the notion that chance is all, and not always a fine thing at that. But there are some marvelous performances, not least Peter Vaughan as the old professor and Smart Wilson as his young interrogator, and it is not often one sees a character hit by lightning on a stage. Les Waters is the

At the Phoenix, "Strippers" is all too evidently a play that didn't start out as a play at all. It started out as a sociological article in The Guardian about the fact that in northeastern England, several housewives had taken to removing their clothes for the hard cash that their husbands were no longer making in more regular employment. That then became a local television documentary, and only then was Peter Terson commis-sioned to turn his playwright's attention to an already well-worn theme. Stripping in the theater has of course a long and honorable tradition: the big number in "Pal Joey" and much of Stephen Sondheim's "Gypsy" are concerned with the removal of clothes, but Terson is not in this for the celebration of the female body, although his play has already attracted some doubtless welcome attention from the protests at the box-office on opening night of a group of feminist campaigners.

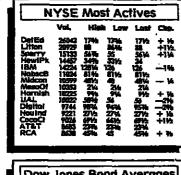

What they should perhaps have been campaigning about is the absence of a coherent play here: clearly Terson has tried to do for "Strippers" what Trevor Griffiths did for "Comedians," which was to give an old Vaudeville tradition a social and political context. They've stripped the Northeast of men ships, money and jobs," says one of the women midway through the evening, "so they might as well strip it of the clothes off your back as well." On that level this might have been an intriguing evening, since no other dramatist has yet got around to considering striptease as a branch of Thatcherian economics.

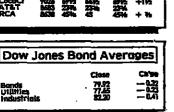

But Terson has had to build so much into a twohour script (five complete strip routines, a solo spot for a club comic and some lumbering situation-comedy sequences to establish family backgrounds) that there is no time for sustained commentary.

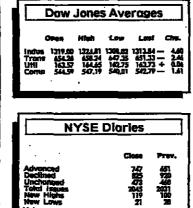

"Strippers" tries to offer something for everyone: social comment, domestic comedy, bare flesh and a few jokes. But Terson is no Osborne, and this is no "Entertainer": it is a ragbag of impressions which lurches from backstage melodrama to instant psychiatry without ever working out whether its customers are readers of New Society, The Stage or Page 3 of The Sun. All of which is a pity, because there are some very good performances, notably those of Bill Maynard as and personal history, Holman seems to say, is as much a matter of random accident as of destiny or science.

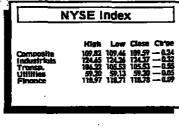

But here as in his haunting "Today" (the Spanish pers' head girl.

Champagne by Mail Charts New Way to Secure Capital

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ARIS — If you want to start a small business in France, venture-capital firms may not be your best bet. For some entrepreneurs, there may be better ways of getting startup money. Marc Bungener and Jerome de Rivoyre, creators of InterMagnum, had an idea but needed financing. A Paris-based group of American venture capitalists told them they would be interested only if they could retain majority control of the new company. Mr. Bungener and his partner declined.

Instead, the two partners raised 34 percent of the 1.4 million francs ($148,936) in start-up costs from French companies not in the venture-capital business, and 25 percent from a quasi-governmental agency. Another 18 percent came from the "fonds de placement à risque," in which a bank, usually government-controlled, takes equity in "When I have an idea, I stick with it until Through buy-back agreements - which give the two the very end." partners the first option to buy the shares - the two partners were able to retain majority control of Present International SA, the new company, which has been operating for six months.

InterMagnum, the service offered by Present International, is to wine and spirits what Interflora is to flowers. Customers can go to their local liquor store and send 10 bottles of champagne anywhere in France in 24 hours for a 60-franc service charge, plus the cost of the champagne.

INCE last December, InterMagmun, through 380 stores, has had 6,000 orders, a figure they hope to increase to 150,000 orders for the first year by enlarging the liquor-store network, starting a new advertising campaign and improv-

The two partners have just added 381 liquor stores to their network through a contract with Etablissements Nicolas, the largest French chain of liquor stores. To build up a large network fast, the service was offered free to the liquor stores. Only the customer pays.

Without fees from liquor stores, Mr. Bungener and Mr. de Rivoyre had to start from scratch to find the money. "I didn't have a cent after my U.S. venture, so it wasn't obvious to find have a cent after my U.S. venture, so it wasn't obvious to find capital," said Mr. Bungener, a veteran entrepreneur at 28. At 23, Mr. Bungener launched City Magazine in New York, a U.S. version of Pariscope, the weekly Paris entertainment guide. When one of his investors did not come up with 50 percent of the investment as promised, the magazine folded.

Always searching for new ideas, Mr. Bungener stumbled on InterMagnum when a friend mentioned how well Interflora did in France with relatively low capitalization. In 1984, the Société Française de Transmissions Florales SA achieved 35.1 million francs in sales of services and 937,608 francs in net profits on 1.5 million orders a year.

Mr. de Rivoyre, 34, who has eight years of corporate experience in the food and drink sector as well as a two-year stint as an entrepreneur, was the ideal partner. "I was born in a wine bottle." he said. His father is a wine producer and distributor in Bordeaux and his mother has a vineyard in Burgundy. After being product manager with Etablissements Nicolas, Mr. de Rivoyre set up a cash-and-carry wine business in Brussels. Later, he went to work for Cusenier, a subsidiary of Pernod Ricard SA, the French liquor concern, as product manager.

3. Last April he quit his job to set up InterMagnum. "It was a big wisk but when I have an idea, I stick with it till the very end," Mr. de Rivovre said.

The investors were sold on the idea and on the two partners' entrepreneurial flair and managing capabilities. Bernard Roux, a self-made man, and chief executive of Roux, Seguela, Caysac & Goudard (RSCG), one of France's largest advertising agencies, was the first to believe in the project and bought 10 percent of the

Argentina, IMF Set Loan Pact

Way Is Cleared For New Credits

By James L. Rowe Jr.

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Argentina and the International Monetary Fund Tuesday reached a tentative agreement on a tough Argentine austerity program that will pave the way for a $1.2-billion IMF loan and unlock $4.2 billion in new bank loans for Buenos Aires.

The U.S. Treasury said it is working with several industrial and Latin American governments to put together a temporary loan to Argentina to enable the country to pay some of the $1.2 billion in overdue interest owed to commer-cial banks. U.S. regulators are meeting this week to examine the quality of the roughly $8 billion of Argentine loans from U.S. banks. On Friday, President Raul Alfonsin announced that an accord with the IMF had been reached on a standby loan, but Tuesday's announcement came only after fur-ther talks at the fund's headquarters in Washington.

Government and banking sources said the IMF has demanded that Argentina take tough steps to reduce inflation, make its exports more competitive and slash its federal budget deficit before the international agency's executive board will formally approve the ar-

Argentina agreed to an IMF program last December, but failed to meet the fund's terms. Its economy has since worsened, and its latest monthly inflation rate of 25 percent works out to an annual rate of 1,300 percent. Domestic investment has virtually dried up and output is declining.

On Tuesday, Argentina announced an 18-percent devaluation of its peso. The move will make imports more expensive and exports cheaper and is designed to help Argentina build up foreign currencies it needs to pay its $48 billion in foreign debts. Some $25 billion of this is owed to banks.

Last week the country raised energy prices 30 percent and is expected to announce a large increase in public-utility rates soon. Both these actions will reduce government subsidies and, as a result, its budget deficit.

Its Formidable Edge: $2-an-Hour Labor, vs. $24 in U.S. By Susan Chira

The stakes are high for Hyundai and other South Korean car makers. After years of relative obscurity producing cars for a small domestic market and exporting them mainly to other Asian countries, South Korean companies are getting ready to break into the United States, the largest market of

U.S. Businesses Shown Lowering Spending Plans

WASHINGTON — U.S. businesses now plan to spend a little less on expansion and modernization this year than earlier anticipated, mostly because of a slow first quarter, the government said Tues-

A survey conducted by the Commerce Department in April and May found business planners expecting to spend 6.2 percent more in 1985 than they did in 1984, after accounting for inflation.

A similar survey conducted from January through March found businesses expecting that 1985 spending would increase 7.3 per-cent over 1984.

However, the new survey indi-cates that much of the downturn may have already occurred, with relatively ambitious capital-spend-ing plans reported for the rest of

"When you look at the rest of 1985, it still looks pretty good," Edwin Warren, economist for Chase Econometrics, said. Businesses "have a pretty strong in-crease slated," he added. However, possible drawbacks could be continued weakness in profits and any increase in interest rates, Mr. Warren said. An added problem could be uncertainty over the passage of a tax-overhaul plan and what effects the plan would have on capital investment.

The manufacturing sector, struggling to compete with a wave of imports, reported a 1.5-percent upward revision in its spending plans. Nonmanufacturing industries. meanwhile, revised their spending plans downward 0.3 percent.

18 years, as the economy grew at a robust 6.8 percent.

Analysts have long expected that capital spending would cool noticeably this year — in line with an anticipated growth rate of 3 percent or less cent or less.

In dollar terms, businesses re ported planning to spend $386.1 billion for new plant and equipment. That is $1.7 billion higher than reported in the previous survey, but the rise is more than offset by inflationary factors.

The department, which uses a capital-goods price deflator to calculate inflation, said that measure rose 0.9 percent in 1984 and is projected to increase 2.9 percent in 1985.

After discounting for inflation, spending was flat in the first quarter of 1985 after a 1.1-percent inrease in the fourth quarter of 1984.

The department said estimates indicate a 3-percent increase in the second quarter of 1985, a 1.1-per-cent rise in the third quarter and a 0.2-percent increase in the fourth.

Current dollar spending, which does not take inflation into ac-count, declined 0.4 percent in the first quarter in the manufacturing sector following a 2.9-percent increase in the fourth quarter of 1984.

However, such industries now report a 12.7-percent increase in current spending in 1985 compared to an 11-percent increase reported in the previous survey.

The sharpest increase, 12.7 percent, is anticipated by durablegoods industries, including 31.1 percent in motor vehicles.

Nondurable goods industries plan an 11.5-percent increase, with Capital spending soared 14.9 the largest rise of 20.9 percent in percent in 1984, the biggest gain in the rubber industry.

Stability for Oil Demand

By Bob Hagerty International Herald Tribune

Co. expects worldwide oil demand this year and next to be about even with 1984's level, a senior BP executive said Tuesday.

But the official, Russell Seal, who heads BP's oil-supply and trading operations in Europe, said at a news meeting that he saw no sign of a "precipitate" decline in prices. BP has made clear its hope that such a decline will not occur.

In the past two months, oil prices on the spot, or noncontract, market have fallen considerably. Brent blend, the most widely traded North Sea crude, was quoted Tuesday at about $26.60 a barrel, down from $28.50 in mid-April.

That decline has put pressure on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which is due to meet in Geneva on June 30 to discuss pricing and output policy.

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — The biggest U.S. banks have been dealt a blow by the Supreme Court's decision on Monday to authorize regional interstate banking, a ruling that allows banks in many states to merge LONDON — British Petroleum and keep out bigger banks from other areas of the country.

By Robert A. Bennett

Ultimately, the decision could lead to a fundamental restructuring of the U.S. banking industry.

Banking experts said that the ruling could jeopardize the predominance of New York's leading banks and predicted that it would squash efforts in Congress to allow banking on a nationwide scale. As a result of the decision, regional banks — some of them al-ready among the largest in the country — would be allowed to expand through interstate mergers while the New York banks would remain confined to their home

The major New York banks and their law firms had hoped that, even if the court had roled against them, the decision would have left leeway for legal maneuvering.

Saudi Arahia, OPEC's most powerful member, already has suggested a price cut for heavier grades of crude oil.

Overall OPEC production "is clearly under control," Mr. Seal said. He estimated that the group's output averaged 15.8 million barrels a day in the first quarter and 15. million or less in May, well below larly Citicorp, Chase Manhattan OPEC's self-imposed ceiling of 16 Corp. and Chemical New York Corp. — are now very much isolat-

Korean auto companies must overcome consumers' suspicion that any low-priced car, and particular-ly an unfamiliar Korean entrant, is shoddy and unsafe. They must compete against Japanese compa-nies that are no longer bound by export quotas, and against U.S. companies that have teamed up with Japan to produce lower-cost

THE OXFORD COMPANION TO ENGLISH LITERATURE

Edited by Margaret Drabble. 1,155 pages. $35. Oxford University Press, 200 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10016.

Reviewed by Hugh Kenner

LATE IN the reign of George V, a retired civil servant named Sir Paul Harvey put in five years making the first of the many Oxford Companions. He knew things gentlemen were supposed to know, notably the Bible, the clas-sics, and literature (English and French). The idea for a Companion to English Literature had come from an Oxford editor. It would put Oxford lore at the disposal of folk less systematically educated — "ordinary everyday readers," the preface said.

So if you were puzzled when someone in a Victorian novel got driven to the next town by a "Jehu," Harvey could explain how "Jehu" meant "a fast and furious driver, a coachman; in humourous allusion to 2 Kings IX. 20." lictorian jocularity was often Biblical.

Yet Harvey stays in print, revised and re-revised. The British novelist Margaret Drabble, in her preface to the fifth revision (a five-year labor like Harvey's) draws a long breath and tries to redefine its purpose. Alas, that's not definable. Though she quotes the old phrase about "ordinary everyday readers." I'm sure she can't help feeling that it means rather less than in 1932, when it could still designate worthy folk beyond the circle of leisured gantlemen with good libraries.

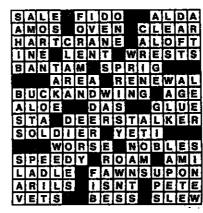

But here at last is an edition I expect to find useful. New entries, revised old entries, are tightly informative alike. Sir Paul in 1932 gave T.S. Eliot five lines. The new Eliot entry begins correctly, "a major figure in English literature since the 1920s." It proceeds for 700 words of admirable summary with no fewer than 23 cross-references including Lear (Edward) and "dissociation of sensibility." I don't know how you'd do better in that space.

Making room for the new, Drabble has weeded ruthlessly, sensibly. Victorian jocular-ity being now remote. "Jehu" was no longer helpful, and he's gone, Adieu. much trivial clutter. Take Harvey's Adieu, much trivial clutter. Take Harvey's first nine entries, from "A. E., 'see Russell; (G. W.)' " to "Abbey Theatre, Dublin, see "Yeats.' " The first of these, "A. E.", was a mistake for AE, so Drabble has moved it to its proper alphabetic place, seven pages on. The next six, from "A Beckett, Gilbert Abbott" (a forgotten Victorian cut-up) to "Abbassides" (a dynasty of caliphs) have all been ousted, and a good thing. That makes room for "Aarun's Rod." the D. H. Lawrence novel, and "Abbey Theatre" no longer says "see 'Yeats.' "but gets 500 memory." 500 nuggety words on its own. A leaner nalf-

Connoisseurs of the Oxford tradition of rank error will be happy to see it alive. Eliot's "Sweeney Agonistes" is dated 1932, eight years too late. For The Oxford Companion to English Literature to have become, despite glitches, both more readable and more useful: that is the star for Margaret Drabble's jersey, a feaster for her cap, a credential for her assault upon

In Pursuit of Italian Basketball Player Marco Baldi, the Drama Becomes Comedy

Sand of Sand

By Sally Jenkins

Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON — When Marco Baldi announced last week that he would play basketball at St. John's University next year, one of the most bizarre recruiting wars in recent memory ended. The pursuit of this 6-foot-11 (2.1meter) Italian schoolboy with a nice outside shot reads like a cloak-and-dagger mystery.

Ask the St. John's coach, Lou Carnesecca, whose tongue is still tied from speaking Italian. Or the University of Southern California coach, Stan Morrison, who had Baldi land on his front doorstep two years ago only to see him defect to New York. Or the University of Maryland coach, Lefty Driesell, who also came up empty, but did return from Europe with an armload of Guezi bags and a 7-2.

The courting of Baldi, an Italian exchange student at Long Island Lutheran High School in Brookville, New York, spanned two continents. It included secretive overseas phone calls, plane trips to Milan, meetings in airports. Baldi was far from the best high school player available this year, but he fit everyone's need for a big man - and

"It's been unusual," Carnesecca said. "But he's 6-11, half-h and everybody chases big guys."

Baldi is an intelligent, well-built 18-year-old who averaged 18 points and 12 rebounds. A banker's son, he has a 4.0 grade-point average and is fluent in French and English, with a smattering of German.

He also was unterly bewildered by U.S. recruiting. "I never saw anything like it," he said. "It was crazy."

He is the first Italian player allowed out of the strict Italian club system to play for a U.S. university. That may have made him more of a catch than his physical creden-tials and accounted for some of the craziness. The Lutheran coach, Bob McKillop, never thought Baldi would be his Baldi postponed his decision until long after most American prospects had made their choices this spring. He spent long hours consulting his parents and general manager during his trip to Milan.

If Baldi was naive about the recruiting process, it is because there is nothing like recruiting in Italy. The Italian club system is completely separate from the school system; a player signs with a club at an early age and is bound to it the rest of his career.

"It's a funny thing about that," McKillop said. "They think schools are for learning."

> Although he lost Baldi, he did sign Christoph Weisheit, a 7-2 exchange student from Cologne who played at Effingham High School in Illinois. Weisheit is the tallest player ever to sign a letter of intent to Maryland and averaged 20.1 points and 6.5 rebounds at Effingham.

"I don't think there are that many good players over there," Driesell said, "Marco is not a Patrick Ewing," the Georgetown University star. "He's just a big kid who needs to play. If he was that good, he'd be playing for his

Another twist to the story is that Baldi's club could call him back to Milan any time. He probably will play at least sounds, said USC's Mortison, who first saw Baldi when he played his call him back to Milan any time. He probably will play at least two seasons at St. John's and could stay for the full four, he played his call the same and the sa but that depends on how quickly he develops.

MONTREAL - Jeff Reardon, the National League leader with 17 saves, finally blew a save opportu-nity, and it cost his team the game. In the eighth inning Monday night, with a man on first and one out, Reardon relieved Dan Schatzeder, who had allowed just two hits and had struck out 10.

Then the Chicago Cubs' Richie Hebner pinch hit for pinch-hitter Brian Dayett and singled. Dave Lopes popped foul for the second out. But catcher Mike Fitzgerald's passed ball moved up both runners and both scored on Ryne Sandberg's single.

Sandberg, back in the lineup after missing eight games with sore ribs, took second on the throw home and scored as Keith Moreland singled.

SAN DIEGO — The biggest success story in baseball this season is probably Andy Hawkins of the San Diego Padres, who lost his job as a starting pitcher a year ago because his manager said he pitched "like a pussycat." He was wild, tentative and inconsistent. But this season, Hawkins has astounded people by starting 11 games, winning all 11 and allowing no more than 3 runs in any of his 10 games, and no more than 2 in 7 of them.

Not only that, Hawkins was the first starting pitcher in the National League in nearly 20 years to open a season with 10 victories and no losses. In 1966, Juan Marichal of the San Francisco Giants won 10 games in his first 11 starts, and went on to a 25-6 season. In the American League, the best start in

Barton IV on Nabuttsco I

Most people who head committees nowadays call themselves chairs, believe it or not, and you probably don't believe it unless you follow the kind of news that involves committees, which would make you a very dull person in-

If you were that kind of person, you would not be reading this. You would be reading the latest emissions from President Reagan about the tax bill's being the greatest boon to humanity since penicillin. So believe me: If you were in charge of a committee these days, you would be called a chair.

Naturally, when I phoned the Committee on Nomenclature I asked to speak to the chair. "We have no chair." said the telephone. "Would you like to speak to the

All right, having said that for lack of a chair I would speak to the couch. I was connected to the telephone of Burton B. Barton IV, who said that my suggestion for calling the huge new organism Nabuttsco would get serious consideration. "I'm sorry to hear it." I said.

Well, you know how it is: A lot of kids nowadays may not know that eigarettes used to be called butts, and it wouldn't help sales of either butts or biscuits if kids thought we were mired in the past."

I did not point out that kids who didn't know that butts were cigarettes certainly wouldn't know what mire was. It is useless to argue with corporate couches about the

In any case, I was interested in how this man liked being Burton B. Barton IV. Names, as you probably now realize, interest me. I like to see a thing or a person well named. And people whose names inciude Roman numerals were once so enviable in my eyes that I despaired about not having one. Roman numerals meant class.

That was before "Rocky" movies took the gloss off Roman numerals. Until then the Roman numeral I had always wanted as part of my name was MCMXXXIV. This was because MCMXXXIV would be indecipherable to most people, if they are as bad at Roman numerals as I am, and this would have made me seem mysterious and romantic. Then, sitting stupefied in a movie house one night watching *Rocky III" or possibly "Rocky XVII," I suddenly realized that if I'd been named Rocky and granted my prayers for a great Roman numeral. I would be Rocky

It said something unflattering about him, I think, that he did not realize that the Roman numeral isn't what it used to be. It explained why he was uninterested in renaming the new cigarette-and-crackers combine

He typifies the unimaginative mentality that rules the nomenclatured committees of today's corporate world. Recently, for example, notified General Electric that it was afflicted with a colorless name that gave little idea of what the company was up to.

Here was an outfit that had made billions out of Pentagon contracts yet had paid no taxes for years. Instead of calling itself Gen-eral Electric. I maintained, it should change its name to General Fleecing. If the bulk of its tax-free profits stemmed from navy contracts, so much the better - it could be called Admiral Fleecing which the public, after a little taxdeductible spending by the public relations department, could surely be induced to think of as "Admira-

The Keeper of the U.S. House's Door

By Martin Tolchin

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — He is a large, round man who stands in the rear of the House chamber during joint sessions of Congress and bellows the titles of those entering the chamber, ultimately proclaiming. "Mr. chamber, ultimately proclaiming, "Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States."

That is what the world sees and hears of James T. Mollov, who rose from ward politics in Buffalo, New York, to defeat William Miller of Mississippi in a vote by the Democratic caucus and become Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives.

He is a gregarious man, with the same zest for politics as the House Speaker, Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., who recently walked to the House chamber with an arm draped over the Doorkeeper's shoulder and said to a reporter: "They don't make them any better. He's one of my great friends and a beautiful man."

The Doorkeeper, nominally in charge of keeping order on the floor, oversees more than 400 employees and a budget of $6.8 million. His jurisdiction includes such seemingly peripheral responsibilities as the House document room, the Office of Photography and a Publications Distribution Service.

"I'm a political creature." Molloy said in an interview in his tiny office cluttered with memorabilia. "If something involves politics, it ends up here." A genial man, Molloy is nevertheless known to have flashes of temper, which he has occasionally expressed in writing, to his He recalled the anxiety of his maiden appearance on the House floor when Preside

Gerald R. Ford delivered his first State of the Union address, on Jan. 15, 1975. "I don't know who was more nervous," Molloy said. "Ford wanted to show that he was in charge, and so did L" Molloy introduced "the Justices of the Supreme Court" and was gently told by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger that the proper introduction was "the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court." Molloy also recalled that moments before he introduced "the President's Cabinet," which was lined up outside the chamber, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger poked his head inside the door and playfully told him, "Tell the world that Henry and the boys Molloy, 48, a third generation Irish-American, grew up in South Buffalo, which he recalled as "a hotbed of politics." The son of a firefighter, he worked as a marine firefighter, a teacher and in the District Attorney's office while earning his undergraduate and law degrees. The turning point in his career, he said, was joining the South Side Democratic Club and being elected its chairman at age 27, "the youngest ward chairman in the city's history." At that time he worked as a loan officer for a local bank, but used an alias, "Mr. Alois," so that his constituents would not recognize their ward leader as the man who was pressing them to pay their bills.

Molloy became a protégé of Joe Crangle, then as now leader of Buffalo's Democratic organization, who worked with Representative John Rooney, a Brooklyn Democrat, to send Molloy to Washington. His first job here, in 1969, was as the House's chief dis-bursing officer. He then served for two years as the House's chief finance officer.

"There were people happy to get me out of Buffalo," Molloy said. In 1974 he mounted his challenge to Miller. who had held the job for more than two decades. Molloy and some veteran House members agree that Miller had developed an independent power base, courting the committee chairmen but largely ignoring the rank

"He forgot that we're just hired help." Molloy recalled. "It's a service-oriented job." Carl Albert, who at that time was the Speaker, remained neutral in the vote by the caucus, as did O'Neill, then the majority leader. Molloy was also aided by some of the younger, antiwar members and some South-em delegations. The current consensus is that Mollov is attentive to members' needs, from an extra ticket to a State of the Union address to appointment of a House page to distribution a newsletter.

"He tries to make the members' job as pleasant as possible, said Representative Henry J. Nowak of Buffalo, an old friend and

Molloy's greatest crisis occurred in 1982, with the reports of sexual misconduct and drug abuse involving House and Senate

"I told the Speaker we had to move quick-Molloy recalled.

He had previously urged stricter supervision of House pages, high school students who were largely left to their own devices off the House floor. He then successfully argued for conversion of a House office building into a dormitory for pages and for an overhauling of the school where pages attend classes while working in the capital.

More recently, Molloy has crossed swords with the staff of the House press galleries. Although he serves as paymaster of the staff, its control is in the hands of committees of

After only 15 reporters turned out to hear Garret FitzGerald, the Irish prime minister, Molloy fired off an angry letter to the press galleries superintendent directing that all 96 seats be filled for a forthcoming visit by President François Mitterrand of France. Molloy now says he regrets sending the letter. But when Mitterrand appeared, there was standing-room only in the press galleries.

Molloy has witnessed the dispersion of ower in the House, and an increase in the umber of younger members.

"You'd think there'd be a lot more camaraderie, but there isn't," he said. "When we used to have late-night sessions, you'd see those small airline whiskey bottles in the cloakroom and hear some singing. But now they're all business. They take themselves too
